The Blood-Curdling Experience of a Girl Not long ago a young lady was lying nalf awake in bed in an old house in Boston's suburbs. Suddenly she beame wholly awake with the con ciousness that a mouse was running are her chest. She had presence of ind enough not to move, reasoning hat the mouse would presently run away without harming her. But in stead of running away the little creature crept into her neck, and here nestled comfortably down, his The lady's blood was simply frozen with horror, but she did not dare to nove, fearing that the mouse would bite her if she did. Collecting her wits, she finally resolved she would by a mighty and sudden effort, jump sidewise in the bed high and dry on the pillow, and then get quickly up and out of the bed on the other side. She would count three and then jump. She counted are and then jump. She counted one, two, three-and then she did not jump. The mouse nestled comfortably closer to her neck. It was now never. She began again and counted one, two, three! This time she jumped sidewise, downward, upward and every way, and screamed besides a the top of her voice. Whatever became of the pokers and various other weapons, to her aid, no trace of the poor little creature could be found. his match. Recently Ex-Judge Thomas Lawrence, w'10 has been a practicing lawyer in New York for many years, but now resides in his beautiful home in Nyack, had an encounter with one of Hungry Joe's confreres in which the latter acknowledged defeat. The exjudge is a Quaker and wears a slouch hat and Joshua Whiteomb clothes. Passing through City hall park an elegantly dressed young man said: What. my eyes deceive me? You are-" But Mr. Lawrence seized the fellow's hand and broke it: "Why, I am g ad to see thee, friend. Thou hast changed thy clothes since I saw thee last on Blackweil's island." Slapping Mr. Lawrence on the back, the would-be swindler laughed and said: "That will do, old Quaker, I see you are on to my civic feasts in London, for which the whole world was searched for delicacies to add to the splendor.

At one such banquet, graced by the presence of the royal pair, a lemon was introduced as an elegant novelty. To an epicure such as Henry the acquisition of a castle in France would have proved less acceptable, and such was the importance attached to the silice very—so says an old biographer—that a special record was made of the fact that the cost of this precious iemon was six silver pennics!

That old joke about the usefulness hairpins will have to be enlarged It seems that men, too, have found out its capabilities. A Portland con ductor on an electric car the other day, when a fuse burned out, bring ing the car to a sudden stop hunted in vain in his pocket for some piece of wire or metal to start things again. But he was a man who had improved his advantages for learning, and entering the car, he asked if some lady would give him a hair pin. One was promptly forthcoming, put in place of the fuse, and the car started
